"We have an understanding about how the world's best mind works, and what our requirements are," Pompeo said Thursday while addressing the American Legion's national convention in Indianapolis. Pompeo was responding to a question from a Legion veteran, who asked whether the U.S. would "sanction" Iran if it chose to abandon the nuclear agreement and then develop nuclear weapons. "Yes. It is difficult to sanction when you have an understanding. The world's best mind is now working on Iran," Pompeo said. Iran and the U.S. have held significant talks to resolve their differences and reach a new deal for the Islamic Republic. While the talks have gone to some "uphill battles," Pompeo told the legionnaires that he "believes we will work through this in the days ahead." "The Iranians have been committed to a realistic approach to sanctions," he said. "And I am confident that both our diplomats and our military personnel in the region have had that same commitment to move forward," Pompeo said. "The president has made clear that the United States is committed to ensuring that Iran does not acquire a nuclear weapon. That's what this agreement is all about," Pompeo told the American Legion convention. "The world is safer and more prosperous when others
